But I must drop my speculations and go upon my narrative. — After planning an annual to be established somewhere in the vicinity, and making an estimate of its expense, which on expired 10 entire days and a considerable part of their nights, I set out upon an expedition 250 miles up the Missouri River, which I have performed, it being precisely three weeks from the day I started to the day of my return.
I took bearings & distances along the River as far as I ascended it, together with such other observations, as the means under my control would permit, so that I think I shall be able to give a pretty correct sketch of the River, which has never been given hitherto, according to its Geographical bearings. — The bottoms along the ~~river~~ are generally low and marshy, covered in most places with very good timber, consisting of Black & Blue ash, Sugar tree, Maple, Sycamore, Lonest bottom wood, Birch, Walnut & Hickory. — In some instances the bottoms which are more elevated, are Prairies. — The main Bluffs are at variable distance from the River from 0 to 12 miles. — The river abounds in fish of a very good quality & of enormous sizes of their kind. — Catfish have been caught weighing from 50 to 100 lbs. — The Buffalo fish is most numerous, — Pike, Perch, Trout, & Sunfish, are plenty.
— It is a sluggish stream abounding in weeds, but the best calculated of any I ever saw for the purposes of Barbed Navigation, — having at all seasons, a sufficient depth of water, and a hard sandy bottom.
Having fixed upon a site for ~~my~~ ~~quarters~~ which was the principal object of my journey. — I returned by land from Gomor's village, inhabited by a tribe of Pawnee Indians, and situated at the head of Lake Peoria, alias the Missouri Lake, to Fort Clarke 25 miles at the foot of the same lake. — At Ft. Clarke I crossed the river with a small detachment of soldiers with provisions for five days, and returned by land to this place, making upon the route we came, a distance of 190 miles, from Ft. C. to St. Louis.
— I left the fort with the determination to pursue a due south course till we should arrive at the Mississippi. — But on the 6th
