USSR: Advance units of the First Ukrainian Army under Gen. Nikolai Vannin, pushed across the 1939 Polish boundary in a general advance that extended in a 150 mile arc west of Kiev. The key rail centers of Korosten and Zhitomir, which have changed hands twice before in the current fighting, were retaken by the Red Army and the advance appeared to be moving along the southwest and southeast branches of the rail lines extending from these important centers. Hundreds of towns were being liberated by the major breakthrough and the movement westward was averaging 10 miles a day.

The American bombers hit two ball-bearing plants near Paris, which in view of the critical need for these in enemy war production, would be considered extremely high priority targets.

Description

An American map titled "Newsmap, Monday, January 10, 1944." The map of Italy shows relief, cities, and towns. The two insets of Italy, focusing on areas near Cassino and Ortona, show rivers, relief, cities, and towns. The map of New Guinea, New Britain, and adjacent areas shows rivers, relief, and towns. The map of the Eastern front shows railroads, rivers, relief, towns, boundaries as of 1939 and 1941, and the points of Soviet advance. Printed text and photographs reveal news on multiple fronts. Printed text, photographs, and drawings on the back detail some of the efforts of the Army Nurse Corps.
