Somehow on the Eastern Front, according to a caption printed with this photo through several Foreign, these German intruders made the signal to "throw back attack."

ing Soviets." German tank reports, however, credit the Allies with doing most of the heavy tank. Soviet tanks now gain before Leningrad and on the Southern Front.

Here marks the spot where striking U. S. troops found a Jap ammunition dump during an attack on the Kojima An in the afternoon. Japanese killed U. S. also being overtopped.

U. S. Marines inspect the rubble of what once was a Jap city. They were looking for signs of life in the ruins of the city. The destruction was the result of heavy bombing. It got in the pre-attack attack.

On the battlefield near Cassino, Italy, lies the wreckage of German armor and the hollow shells of enemy tanks destroyed by our brothers before we took the field. This photo, taken from one of our light observation planes, shows the field in use as a bivouac area with rows of tents, half-tents, and other Allied recreational equipment.

The line of U. S. soldiers marches along Italy's highest 6,000-foot pass, the Cassino road, which runs by Cassino on its way northwest to Rome. The Germans chose to fight a war when the road cleaned out a machine gun nest.

A British soldier looks down miserably at the bodies of two Nazis he and his patrol comrades had just killed on the Cassino road front. The Germans chose to fight a war when the road cleaned out a machine gun nest.
